In terms of hiking itself, the distance is around 900-1000m. The worst thing that can happen is that if it starts to rain, as it did in our case, then it will be one of the craziest hikes you have ever done. During rainy weather, the path becomes extremely slippery. Many local people will rent you hiking sticks if you need them. However, I strongly suggest that you grab one right away. Additionally, a gorgeous view will greet you after an hour. The scene is filled with lush green fields and mountains in the distance. Small wooden huts dot the landscape without electricity poles or televisions in the fields. Peace seems to fill the air. Arang Kel Neelum Valley is a small, lush green village. I am similarly known as Hill Station and a popular tourist spot in the Neelum valley, Azad Kashmir. It’s 149 km (92.58 miles) long, running from Muzaffarabad (the capital and largest city of Azad Kashmir) to Kel, a village in Neelum Valey, at 2097 meters above the sea level. Kel has an army base and a hospital. Plus there is also phone service available if you want to place a call; and shops to purchase amenities. The route is dangerous. Not recommended to newbies. Along the way you’ll have to deal with some dangerous drop offs.Do you need a 4x4 to drive the Neelum Valley Road?To complete this real adventure, a 4x4 vehicle is required because of the dirt tracks left behind as a result of the catastrophic earthquake of 2005. The road conditions in winter are extreme. The road is usually blocked due to heavy snowfalls and it is very difficult to reach upper parts of the valley. There are also land slidings, which cause that visitors suffer from very cold weather and also food shortage problem when they are stuck on the road. After Kel, the lack of proper roads means that the journey further on can only be performed by 4WD vehicles. From Keran to Kel road condition is not well and not suitable for low floor vehicles.Is the Neelum Valley Road worth it?Tucked away in the Neelum Valley (also spelled Neelum Valley), the road is jeepable in fair weather.
